Sailfish 276 Dual Console

One for all.

With its popular design blending center console and bowrider elements, the dual console has achieved popularity with boaters everywhere. Finding versatility with those wishing for a serious fishing platform as well as a family cruiser, Sailfish presents its 276 Dual Console (DC). This new model includes the best designs and innovations from the company's more than 30 years of experience building fishing boats.

"The 276 DC features advancements in technology, usability and special amenities," says Amy Krueger Malow, Jefferson Beach Yacht Sales' president.

The boat runs on the sixth generation of Sailfish's Variable Degree Stepped (VDS) hull, providing three well-defined running surfaces: The first, with its deep deadrise for cutting through the water; the second utilizing turned-down strakes for lift; and the third for stability. Combined, they result in a comfortable and safe ride in varying sea conditions.

On the construction side, with Sailfish DNA focused on sea-tested toughness, both the hull and superstructure of the 276 DC are reinforced with Kevlar and carbon fiber with a foam-filled stringer system. To eliminate any chance of rot, wood is not used anywhere.

While fishing features abound — numerous rod holders, insulated fishboxes, built-in baitwells and plenty of tackle storage — your non-fishing amenities include a built-in bow cooler and comfortable seating forward, amidships and aft.

"It's awesome how the Sailfish brand is evolving," adds Jefferson Beach's sales professional Jonathan Kopija. "The new 276 DC hits all the marks with incredible use of space and amazing standard and extra options."

Quality construction with layout and amenities for both serious fishing and maximum family fun is what the Sailfish 276 DC is all about. ★
